Project description

Education for sustainable development (ESD) is one of the great challenges today. School Gardens (SG) as authentic learning environments are promising settings to develop sustainable relevant competences. The immense amount of knowledge and valuable information on school gardening techniques and didactic methods having accumulated across Europe is not visible for the community and, therefore, not available for teaching efforts. Fostering SG activities in Europe by giving them an international platform is a potential way to reach teachers and early childhood educators as well as students and other gardening people. In this project, sustainable relevant skills and competences for garden-based learning will be defined. The participants will develop a curriculum for the teachers training and ICT materials to share. There will be an exchange of experiences and a sharing of best practice with the focus on teachers and students as future educators. The project will unite existing national networks to a European one and so make ideas and benefits available for everyone. Global challenges can only be solved by international collaborations.
